

Still More Rainfall Expected along Flooded Gulf Coast

Since early June, torrential rains had flooded the Gulf Coast, triggering widespread flood across north-west Florida and coastal Alabama. As of June 11, million-dollar damage was confirmed, and yet more rainfall was expected to affect several regions in Florida State.

A flood warning came in effect Tuesday along the Gulf coast across north-west Florida and south-west Alabama. Escambia County in Florida State remained in a state of emergency as progress was shown through the shut-down of several shelters in that area. Officials and residents in affected areas will stay alert to the development of the situation.
